FRAGMENTS FOR HERACLITUS These drawings were inspired by Heraclitus' writings (fragments) and from meditative walks through the woods on the land of the Saltonstall Foundation where my studio was located in the winter of 2008/2009. These Drawings explore the connection between the land and the artist and inquire about the space between.

Listing fragments by DK number is a great idea for reference, but it makes the fragments seem disjointed. Kahn tried to reconstruct the order of the fragments in Heraclitus' original work; this is a great idea for reading the fragments, but it does not help students put ideas and concepts together that are scattered throughout the work. His new ...

Aus diesen indirekten Quellen sammelte Hermann Diels 137 Fragmente sowie mehrere Äußerungen zu Heraklits Leben. Dieses Material veröffentlichte er 1901 unter dem Titel Herakleitos von Ephesos sowie ab 1903 als Teil seines Werks Die Fragmente der Vorsokratiker. Nach dieser Ausgabe werden Heraklits Fragmente gewöhnlich zitiert.

Here is a pdf of the fragments, and here and here are the HOPWAG episodes on Heraclitus. Kenny's section on Heraclitus in chapter 1 is also useful. First off, this was a more difficult read than I expected. It was interesting, but the fragments are, well, fragmentary—disconnected and never really presenting a complete thought.

Fragments of Heraclitus 7. 1 It is wise for those who hear, not me, but the universal Reason, to confess that all things are one. 2 To this universal Reason which I unfold, although it always exists, men make themselves insensible, both before they hear it and when they have heard it for the first time. For notwithstanding that all things happen according to this Reason, men act as ...

with fr. 85 (Heraclitus: Fragments (Toronto, 1987), 152–3). There is, however, no inferential particle linking the two sentences of fr. 61, and yet it would be difficult to deny that it is an argument. For more on the connection between fr. 110 and 111, see Kahn, Art, 181–3 and n. 225. Besides Robinson, Kirk, Heraclitus, 130, and Marcovich, Heraclitus, 390, separate the two fragments ...

In his fragments Heraclitus does not explicitly criticize the Milesians, and it is likely that he saw them as the most progressive of previous thinkers. He does tacitly criticize Anaximander for not appreciating the role of injustice in the world (B80), while he might have expressed some admiration for Thales (B38).

Heraclitus believed in the harmony of the world and the unity of opposites, stating that "the path up and down are one and the same". According to Diogenes, Heraclitus worked for many years on a single "continuous treatise On Nature", which "was divided into three discourses, one on the universe, another on politics, and a third on theology". Unfortunately, only fragments of this ...

Heidegger continues with a long excursus on Heraclitus's fragment 123 (physis kryptesthai philei, traditionally translated into English as "Nature loves to hide"), and he offers his distinctive reading that being as physis as al?theia is never fully transparent to us. All emergence is fraught with "concealment," which is his signature way of saying that the emergence and shining-forth of ...
