Volume 2: Wayland: Purgatory. Published: 2003 This book is much longer than the previous one and charts Archer's time in HMP Wayland, a C-Category prison near Thetford in Norfolk. The rules are more relaxed, but as the title suggests, boredom is the main enemy for all prisoners, not just Archer. He charts each day in varying levels of detail depending on whether anything of interest happens. His friends and family remain constantly faithful and carry on his

This is the only volume of the series (that I've read thus far) t0 take on a singular issue: a doomed relationship between our narrator (Proust) and Albertine as they share the Paris apartment of Proust's parents. He only wants, physically, a kiss from Albertine after he climbs into bed but before she proceeds to her own bedroom: in his childhood, he couldn't get to sleep until his mother ...
